Under the proposed ATF rule:

- Millions of stabilizing brace-equipped pistols will retroactively be subject to NFA control.
- Stabilizing brace-equipped pistols will have to remove the brace, remove the short barrel, destroy the firearms, turn it into an ATF office or pay $200 and submit forms to ATF. It can take up to a year to get your forms back.
- Congress did not change the law. ATF is acting outside of the scope of the National Firearms Act.
- Stabilizing brace-equipped firearms will not be able to be gifted or privately sold. They must go through an FFL. A transfer can take up to a year.
- The ATF's rules are a gun-grab. There are between 10 and 40 million stabilizing braces and similar devices in civilian hands. ATF can't even get NCIS fixed.
- ATF's proposed rule discriminates against shooters with disabilities.
- ATF's system to classify which firearms would be covered by their proposed NFA expansion are confusing. A law-abiding gun owner could become a felon and never know it based on a point system that is arbitrary and capricious.
